Levi Doty, Patriarch of Frankfort Passes On In 94th Year

A wonderful character and a life rich in humanitarianism and of sacrifice, has closed its final chapter on earth in the passing on of Levi Doty, the patriarch of Frankfort township who died at 1:30 o'clock Thursday morning, January 28 in the home he has lived in for 60 years in the village of Frankfort. Pneumonia was the cause of death.

Mr. Doty was 94 years old at the time of his passing. These long years were filled with good deeds done, not only for his fellowmen, but for his friends, the dumb animals. For many years Mr. Doty waged a relentless war against cruelty to animals in Will County as an officer of the Humane Society with which Society he was identified since 1860. He was largely instrumental in having more humanitarian methods of killing cattle in the big Chicago packing houses adopted. He was in charge of humane work in the stock yards in Chicago during the eighties and began his work there in 1881.

Mr. Doty was interested in raising horses and about forty or fifty years ago he shipped many fine bred horses to Boston and other eastern markets.

He was a very kind hearted man and was ever ready to do a favor or lend a helping hand and there are a number of people in Frankfort who will remember him for his generosity to them. He was a staunch supporter of right and justice and was ever in the forefront to champion any cause that was for the best interests of his fellowmen and of his community.

Afflicted with deafness the greater part of his life, he bore his cross with grace and fortitude. He was keenly interested in national, state county and local affairs all his life until within the last two years when the burdens of age began to rest heavily upon him.

Mr. Doty was endowed with a remarkable insight into human nature. His keen intuition made it possible for him to detect a criminal at a glance and he was instrumental in bringing many culprits to justice and was noted for his detective ability. He enjoyed good health during his long life until within the last few years. Altho he could not hear a sound, Mr. Doty used to drive an automobile and never had an accident.

Mr. Doty was the son of Ambrose Doty who came from Ohio in 1834 and settled on the line between New Lenox and Frankfort townships. His land laid on both sides of the line and his first log cabin was built just over the line in New Lenox township.

Mr. Doty was born in this log cabin on July 21, 1837. In later years he owned all the farm land originally settled on by his father.

In the year 1861 he was united in marriage with Miss Emily Carpenter of Frankfort. They located in the village of Frankfort and resided there all their lives. Mrs. Doty was a wonderful helpmate to her husband and he depended almost entirely on her in his later years.

She was claimed by death November 2, 1930 and this great sorrow weighed very heavily on Mr. Doty. The last time he was in the public eye was last fall during the centennial celebration of Frankfort township when his picture together with that of Mrs. Ebenezer Stevens also of Frankfort, appeared in the Chicago Daily News as among the oldest residents of Frankfort township. His sister, Mrs. Libby McDonald, died a few months ago at the age of 93 years.

His boyhood home was typical of the early settlers and was used as the first church in this section. Rev. Mr. Blackwell, an itinerant Methodist preacher formed a class at the Doty home in 1836. The elder Doty's residence was a regular preaching place until the era of school houses, as there was no church edifice built until after the village of Frankfort was laid out.

Mr. Doty often told of meeting Abraham Lincoln in Joliet in October 1856. The occasion of Lincoln's appearance in Will County was the discussion of the slavery question. Owen Lovejoy was the principal speaker, but Lincoln also spoke.

The meeting was held on the Stevens farm, in what is now Ridgewood. Mr. Doty drove to the gathering place with a four horse wagon and the wagon was used by Lincoln and Lovejoy as their speaking platform.

Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at two o'clock at the Frankfort M. E. church with burial in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery beside his beloved life's companion.

Rev. Samuel Weisshaar will officiate.

Surviving are his step-daughter, Mrs. James Garden and a grandson of Chicago, a niece Mrs. Jennie Pfaff, Frankfort and a number of other nieces and nephews and a legion of friends.

The Levi Doty we knew in the flesh is no more, but the many kind deeds he did during his long and useful life will live on to perpetuate his memory.

Frankfort Murder Case Suspect Seized In Chicago

Frank Wilson, 31 years old, of Chicago, is in the custody of the Chicago police and has been definitely connected with 45 robberies including three oil station hold ups in Joliet and is also regarded as a suspect in the fatal shooting of William Schmook, attendant of the McMullen service station at the four corners north of Frankfort on the night of January 10.

Mokena Board Plans To Stone All The Streets

According to present indications, all the streets in Mokena, with the exception of Front Street, are going to be stoned this summer.

At the meeting of the Mokena village board Wednesday night, Alderman August Hentsch stated that it was his opinion that if the village board would place the money collected from vehicle licenses in a separate fund as provided by ordinance and use this money to improve the streets, the people would be willing to pay these licenses promptly and would be pleased to know they were receiving a direct benefit from this tax. Alderman Hentsch suggested that the village be bonded for $2,000 so that all the street improvement work could be done this year and use the vehicle license money to pay the bonds and interest.

Alderman Richard Hensel stated that Henry Yunker of Mokena had told him he would stone all the streets in Mokena outside of Front street for $1,500 and would wait a year for payment if 6 per cent interest were paid.

The board acted favorably on the proposition made by Alderman Hentsch and ordered the vehicle license money be kept in a separate fund and that all vehicle licenses must be paid by May 1, 1932. All licenses not paid by that date will be turned in for collection.

The board instructed the clerk to write to Mr. Yunker inviting him to attend the next board meeting in February and state his proposition relative to stoning the streets.

DOGS NUISANCE

Alderman Hentsch said complaints had been made that too many dogs are running at large, including several police dogs who are killing chickens. Mr. Hentsch said that complaint had also been made that a dog belonging to Simon Hohenstein, had bitten a hobo.

If the owners of dogs running loose do not take out a license for them and do not keep them tied up, the dogs will be shot.

DRAINAGE QUESTION

Alderman Albert Braun said that during the recent rains his cellar was flooded, also that of Harry Mall and that the water rose so high in the latter's basement so as to put out the fire in the furnace and ruined a motor.

After much discussion, it was finally thought the trouble might be with clogged or broken tiles on the west side of Wolf Road. A committee consisting of Aldermen Ona McGovney, August Hentsch and Albert Braun was appointed to investigate the matter and to be empowered to have such work done as is found necessary to overcome the trouble.

Former Mokena Camp Fire Girls Guardian Honored

The former Morning Star Camp Fire Girls of Mokena, met at the home of Mrs. Wm. Semmler Monday evening for a surprise gathering for Miss Bertha Benson, their former guardian, in appreciation of her having had their charter framed. Even though the girls are no longer in active Camp Fire work, they still remember their organization and enjoy getting together.

A lovely buffet supper was served at 6:30 by Mrs. Semmler, assisted by her daughter, Adeline. Four quartet tables were spread in the living room. The Camp Fire colors, brown and red were used on the paper service plates, nut cups and candle holders. A red candle formed the center of each table. A large tissue paper star, lighted by small varied colored electric lights, beamed down from a high position on the wall. Place cards, made by some of the girls as honor work, were used to seat the guests. Valentines were found at each place as favors.

The supper, which was much enjoyed, was served and eaten by candle light, which threw a soft glow, reminding all of camping days. At the close of the last course the following girls responded as a toast, to the following questions, which were asked by Mrs. Semmler: "Do you remember when you camp fire girls were first organized? Evelyn Moore. When you went camping by Alice Horras. When you went on a hike, by Grace Moriarty. When you went to Chicago, by Gertrude Sippel. When you went swimming, by Adeline Semmler. When you sang Christmas carols, by Alva Hall. When you had a treasure hunt, by Evelyn Wachter. When you had examination, by Bernice Muehler. When you dined at Woodruff hotel, by Genevieve Pfleger. When you all went to a show, by Marie Tierney and how you appreciated all these things, by Eleanor Hall."

The charter was read by Alice Horras and the guardian's appointment was read by Eleanor Hall and both were passed among the girls who studied the symbolism of the drawings.

Grace Moriarty presented, on behalf of the girls, a book of Edgar Guest's poems, "Just Folks", to Miss Benson, who responded pleasingly.

A camp fire song was sung and then the tables were cleared and bunco was played until 9 o'clock when adieus were said and all wended their way homeward, all feeling they had spent a very pleasant evening.

Two of the boys were brothers and the third one was a cousin. They gave the following names and addresses: Harry Meyers, 12, of 4634 Drexel blvd., his brother Lowell of the same address and William Mather, 4523 1-4 Drexel blvd.

"We were happy to mention on the air last Friday noon your recent wedding anniversary. In these days when many speak so lightly of marriage, we like to tell of marriages that have continued happily for half a century or more.

"I am going to make a request of you. At some time in the near future we would like to devote a whole program to a discussion of a happy marriage for the benefit of the younger generation, many of whom perhaps will be launching out into the great sea this year, we would like to ask you what is the secret of a happy marriage. Maybe it isn't a secret at all. Let us have the benefit of your counsel for the good it may do to younger people."

The following very significant answer has been made by Mr. and Mrs. Keuch:

"The secret of a happy married life as we find it is contentment, trust in one another and to meet things squarely as they come with a smile."

A beautiful three layer cake representing the skill and artistic taste of the Tinley Park Bakery graced the center of the table. The cake was decorated with a golden spray and rosebuds and bore the inscription: "Golden Wedding Anniversary 1932."

Harold's Mother Knew Answer

"Yes, sir, I am certainly proud of my little boy," says Mrs. H. M. Smith, 421 Topeka Ave., Topeka, Kansas. "He's five and weighs fifty-seven pounds. He's the picture of health as you can see, and I feel like he'll always be that way as long as I can get California Fig Syrup. I have used it with him ever since he was a year old. I knew what to give him for his colds and his feverish, upset spells because Mother used California Fig Syrup with all of us as children. I have used it freely with my boy and he loves it. It always fixes him up, quick."

In many homes, like this, the third and fourth generations are using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup because it has never failed to do what is expected of it. Nothing so quickly and thoroughly purges a child's system of the souring waste which keeps him cross, feverish, headachy, bilious, half-sick, with coated tongue, bad breath and no appetite or energy as long as it is allowed to remain in the little stomach and bowels. Fig Syrup gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act as Nature intends them to do, and helps build up and strengthen weak, pale and underweight children. Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. The genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years, always bears the word "California."

Kohn, director of the department of purchases and construction, the expenditures scheduled for the 18 months remaining of the present biennium, will effect a further saving of $113,000.

Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom has ruled that a township school treasurer legally cannot loan school funds to a trustee of schools of his township.

An investigation of more than 8,000 cases of appendicitis leads the state department of public health to the conclusion that delaying surgical treatment and relying upon laxatives are the two outstanding factors contributing to the fatality of the disease. Second Educational Series of Radio Lectures Started

Authorities on economics, psychology and other subjects have inaugurated the second series of "Listen and Learn" Lectures under the auspices of the National Advisory Council on Radio in Education, over coast-to-coast networks.

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, started the spring series in January when he and representatives of the Council outlined the lecture courses to follow. The programs are heard every Saturday over NBC-WEAF facilities.

The series is scheduled for twenty weeks, closing with a valedictory program the last week in May.

Among the Speakers.
International trade, the tariff and industrial planning are economic subjects to be touched upon by speakers such as James Harvey Rogers of Yale, Ernest M. Patterson of Pennsylvania, F. W. Taussig of Harvard, George Henry Soule, Jr., editor of The New Republic, and Walton H. Hamilton of Yale.

Changes and growth in personalities, animal behavior and psychology in education are topics to be taken up by Fred A. Moss of George Washington University, Henry W. Nissen of Yale, Frank N. Freeman of Chicago, and others.

Public response to the initial ten lectures broadcast in the fall indicated, according to the Council, that they reached listening groups in the home, school, special neighborhood gatherings and even fishermen of Nova Scotia.

PATRIOTIC SONGS

The songs that thrill Americans, patriotic selections written by inspired composers, will be played in the February National 4-H club program of the National Farm and Home Hour by the United States Marine Band.

The concert will be another program in the series by the Marine Band on "Learning to Know America's Music."

Beginning with "The Star Spangled Banner," the renditions will swing through "America," and the lively strains of "Dixie." These will be followed with "Yankee Doodle," "America the Beautiful," "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," "Hail Columbia," and a more recent song written when the United States Army was moving to the European battle front, "Over There."

The programs are designed to acquaint and familiarize the $50,000 4-H club members of the United States with the music which is typical of America.

Each month an additional concert will be provided by the Marine Band. On March 5 America's hymns and religious songs will be featured. The programs are broadcast over a coast-to-coast network.

The series, which promises to be one of the most entertaining features of the National Farm and Home Hour during the winter months, will contain much basic forestry information of interest to both town and country listeners.

Carver Wells, adventurer, explorer and lecturer, who starts a new series of programs over an NBC network next month under the title "Conoco Adventurers," says that if all the hogs in Texas were rolled into one hog, they, or it, could root out a Panama Canal with ease and dispatch.

A lion's roar in the studios of the National Broadcasting Company is produced, not by a lion's vocal cords, but with a bass viol bow drawn across a length of hemp covered with rosin.

Harvey Hays, well known to radio listeners for his interpretations of outdoor roles, will play the part of the forest ranger. Wise in the ways of forest uses and protection through long experience in the fields, the character will often find himself in amusing situations with his sub assistant whose eagerness sometimes overwhelms his better judgment.

In presenting Organ Melodies, Irma Glen has the three-fold job of speaking the verse while she plays the organ with feet and hands, and watches the music, prose, and stop watch.

Lesson for January 31

JESUS FEEDS THE MULTITUDE

LESSON TEXT—John 6:1-14; 32-37; 48-51.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Feeds a Hungry Crowd.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Jesus Did With a Boy's Lunch.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Sympathy of Jesus With Human Need.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the Bread of Life.

I. Jesus' Compassion on the Multitude (vv. 1-5a, cf. Matt. 14:14).

The sight of a crowd always excited the Lord's sympathy. He knew that they were as shepherdless sheep (Mark 6:34). Besides, they were so ignorant that they had no appreciation of him. Added to this was their physical hunger. This condition aroused the Saviour's pity. How true this is of the multitude today! The crowd surges about us as shepherdless sheep, having no one to care for them. Yet down deep in their hearts is a hunger for God and the truth.

II. Jesus' Conference With the Disciples Touching the People's Need (vv. 5b-9).

The inquiry of Philip was not for the Lord's benefit, for he knew what he would do (v. 6). His object was:

1. To teach them their sense of obligation to the multitude. We all need to be taught the wonderful truth that God has made man his partner in the salvation of the world. We are workers together with God (II Cor. 6:1). It is the very highest privilege as well as a most solemn obligation to co-operate with God in saving the millions who are groping in darkness.

2. To teach them their helplessness in the face of such great need and responsibility. The loaves and fishes which the lad had provided for his lunch were as nothing in the presence of five thousand men besides women and children. Well might Andrew exclaim: "What are these among so many?" It is a good thing to realize our true needs that we may be driven to Christ who is able to supply them.

3. To teach them that their sufficiency is from the Lord. Without him we can do nothing (John 15:5). Christians can no more carry on the Lord's work of themselves than the branch can bear fruit without the vine. The vine supplies the life and strength for the production of fruit. Philip's arithmetic was of no use in the face of such need. He had to fall back upon the Lord Jesus who has all power.

III. Jesus' Method of Feeding the Five Thousand (vv. 10-13).

He paused to give thanks for the scant supply, thus teaching us that we should always bring our abilities and gifts to him that he might bless them to his use.

1. The Lord's part was to bless and break the bread, even to create the needed supply (v. 11). The disciples could not perform this part. The same kind of bread was provided for all, rich and poor, young and old.

2. The disciples' part was to distribute that which he had blessed and consecrated (v. 11). This is true of the Christian worker today. We are not responsible for the supply but are responsible for its distribution to all those who are hungry and perishing for the bread of life.

3. The people's part was to sit down and eat (v. 10). They had no part in the provision, neither in its distribution, but only to take from the hands of the disciples and eat that which the Lord had provided. This is exactly our situation. The people are responsible for taking and eating of the bread of life; that is, faith and obedience are required of them.

4. The superabundance of God's grace (v. 13). When all had eaten to the full, much was left. This shows that the gospel is ample for the salvation of the world.

IV. The Effect of This Miracle (v. 14).

They recognized him at once as the prophet who should come. They believed him for his works' sake.

V. Jesus, the Bread of Life (vv. 32-37, 48-51).

1. Christ is to the soul what bread is to the body.

2. How to obtain this bread. It is by coming to Christ and believing on him.

3. The blessed issue of taking this bread:

a. The one who eats this bread shall never hunger or thirst.

b. He shall never die. The one who eats the bread of heaven, that is, the one who receives Jesus Christ, has eternal life.

Salvaging Mail Matter
A great many letters would reach the dead letter offices if there were no postal directory service. How effectively this service performs its task is seen in the fact that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1929, only 29,079,619 undeliverable letters were received in all the dead letter offices in the country—a fact to which the postmaster general points with considerable pride. Considering the billions of letters that are handled by the post office each year—the New York post office alone delivers 17,000,000 letters every day—the dead letter office figures seem slender, indeed.

THE STORY

Six bandits hold up the steamer, Midnight Sun, on the Mackenzie, kill Jimmy Montgomery, and escape with gold dust and furs. At the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance, Sgt. Alan Baker disputes with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, regarding plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out in the police launch with, are men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is thrilled at the arrival of the police launch. She had expected to marry Baker, and had been stunned at the news that he was to marry Elizabeth Spaulding. Stolen furs are found on the MacMillan place and evidence points to Joyce's father. Alan leads his expedition up the big Alooska. Compelled by Haskell's foolish orders to divide the party, Alan fails to capture the bandits, and returns to Fort Endurance. Haskell blames him for the failure and Alan is allowed to buy out of the Mounted on condition that he absolve Haskell from blame. Alan starts out of the country in a motor canoe.

The exhaustion that had drained her had left her very quiet of mind. She could think clearly, in thoughts precise and rational. . . .

You fought this battle once, Joyce, and you won it; and then you handed the sword back to your enemy and gave him power over you again. When Bill first told you last fall of Alan's engagement—do you remember the heartbreak of those weeks, Joyce? You finally rose above it, you conquered. But then you permitted yourself to hope again. When Alan merely came past here on a patrol, after staying away from you all winter, you went wild with hope.

Last night Bill came to you once again; and after he left, you collapsed there on that rock. Joyce, don't let yourself open to agony such as that. You must forget Alan Baker. You must, you must! You cannot turn this way or that; you cannot evade it; you must walk that path. You must never again look back. You have been punished for looking back, and your punishment has been terrible. In self-preservation you must forget Alan Baker. . . .

As she lay there gazing up at Alan's picture and seeing her course so clearly, it seemed to Joyce that if she could destroy his image there on the dresser, if only she had the courage to do that, it would be a symbol of destroying his image in her heart.

After a little while she got up from the bed; and going over to the dresser, began taking out of it all of Alan's letters to her. They dated back across six years, addressed to her here, at her college, at Ottawa—all of them carefully treasured. Pack by pack they went into the stove.

There was good augury for Joyce in the firm and unhesitant way she set about burning them.

He had given her more than a few presents: a costly old-fashioned lavalliere which had been his mother's; a miniature hope chest of India-silk kerchiefs which had been the envy of her college friends; a gold-and-ivory hunting knife; a wrist watch for graduation present, and a dozen less expensive gifts. Joyce laid aside the lavalliere to send to Elizabeth; but the other gifts she destroyed by fire.

She took his picture from the dresser, and burned it.

Afterwards she sat by the table writing a long letter to her bureau chief in Ottawa, telling him frankly about her father, her hope to see her father vindicated and then to bring him over to Ottawa with her; and asking him if his former promise of a position whenever she wished to return was still good.

At noon, hours later, when old Pence looked in, he was pleased to find her plunged into a dreamless sleep. The secret worry he had noted on her face this last week seemed to have gone now. Her features were pale, but there was a look of peace on them, of some strange spiritual peace at heart.

CHAPTER VII

By Lone Camp Fires

That gray dawn when he said good-bye to Joyce at Fort Endurance, Baker set off alone on a journey of a thousand miles. Instead of heading northeast toward the Thal-Azzah where the bandits were hiding, he turned his canoe prow directly away from them and started south, up the Mackenzie. He did not delude himself about his plan. It was little better than a desperate gamble, and he knew it. But the usual man-hunting methods were useless against those criminals; and his plan was the last thing in the world they would be expecting.

By traveling in his own motor canoe, depending entirely on his own resources, he expected to cut ten days from the fastest time of the fur-company boats.

In those lonely hours, as he stared in reverie at the shimmering pine hills, it was borne in upon Alan that he had forever cut himself off from life here in this North country. He felt as though he had been torn up by the roots. The system he had founded at Fort Endurance had been his own creation. He had been a builder in his own right. From the ground up, Fort Endurance belonged to him. He and Curt and Jimmy had cut the very timber for barracks and cabins. The work had been his particular work in life. "Sergeant Baker of Endurance" stood for something. There was but one such man in the Dominion. Now he was cut off from it, an alien of lost identity, never to be a part of it, the guiding genius of it, again.

On the third day he met a lone-fire Indian, a young Chipewyan wandering aimlessly, with some secret personal tragedy preying on him. Alan took him into the motor canoe, and together they traveled on. Hardly speaking a dozen words a day, they worked on up the Mackenzie, sleeping by turns, spelling each other at the motor. Raising a blanket sail to a northeast wind, they scudded across the island-dotted lake from Resolution, and whipped up the Quatre Fourches delta toward Forst Smith.

Watching the dim clouded stars above him, Alan looked steadily at the two girls who had loomed so large upon his manhood. In this last week a cataclysm had happened in his life, breaking into the old order, blasting the even routine of week and month and season. It had opened his eyes in a deeper way than ever before to the preciousness of his intimacy with Joyce, to the priceless quality of their former comradeship. Now, when it was irrevocable, he was asking himself whether the motive and powerful circumstance which had actuated him were humanly justifiable. Had not he and Joyce had a right to happiness? Had he, in his stern sacrifice, been blind to the needs of the human heart?

Tired out by days of incessant travel, he fell asleep at last, and dreamed that in his cabin it had been Joyce, not Elizabeth, whose arm had been around him and who was waiting for him when this lone adventure should be ended.

At Fort Smith the heavy rains had rendered the sixteen-mile portage impossible to teams and to the motor trucks which piled that stretch. Alan dared not wait; his days were too precious. In his decision to go on, his young Chipewyan friend stuck with him. Shouldering their craft, they plodded stoically across that slippery, red-clay stretch to Fitzgerald.

Among the north-bound crowd waiting there, he spotted the tall, slightly-stooped figure of Superintendent Williamson, who was going north to inspect the down-river posts. The superintendent was the last person in the world whom Alan wanted to meet. His first superior officer when he graduated from the "Awkward Squad," Williamson had been good to him and taken a fatherly interest in his brilliant work. What would he say when he learned that his protege had bought out and deserted the Force? . . .

"Your commission wasn't forthcoming, so you quit! Your loyalty to our work went no deeper than that!" In his eyes a quitter was worse than a gross incompetent.

Passing by, ten feet away, Williamson merely nodded slightly and said, "Good luck, Baker."

Alan understood. He thought: "In civilian clothes, so far away from Endurance. . . . He thinks I'm on some detective detail. Good Lord, when he finds I'm out, bought out—!"

Williamson's esteem was a precious thing to Alan, as precious as a father's. An impulse swept him to talk with the superintendent and tell him the whole sorry story. But there was the matter of that signed affidavit. Alan refused to go back on that; and even if he did he would literally be branding himself a liar. What did his personal feud with Haskell matter now? He was out of the Mounted. And the superintendent would try to stop his venture if he heard, for it was beyond the law.

He allowed Williamson to go past.

Setting their boat to water, he and the young Chipewyan hurried on to the great delta-mouth of the Peace, where they caught up with a steamer going on to McMurray. The young Indian wanted to turn west to the Rockies and see the Land of Ice Mountains. Giving him the motor canoe and the outfit, Alan shook hands, said Klahowya, and went aboard the boat.

In his cabin, with the steamer throbbing on toward Steel-End, Alan wondered what Joyce's reaction would be if he should go to her and frankly tell her about that tragic incident in his life which had brought about his engagement to Elizabeth. Joyce would understand his motive. She would no longer think he'd acted of his own free will. Perhaps if she knew this truth, she might allow him to resume their old intimacy. . . . But Elizabeth, what of her? She was waiting, waiting there at Endurance, for him to marry her. In honor and faith he could not break away now. That secret and powerful circumstance still bound him and would bind him to her all his life.

A half-mile up in the fleecy clouds, up above the pretty city of Edmonton, Mr. "Buzzard" Featherof was dropping out toy parachutes carrying free cakes and printed matter of the E-Z Kleen Soap and Washing Powder Company, Ltd.

He was tired, stiff, hungry and indescribably bored.

During the late war Buzzard had knocked an assorted number of Fokkers, Taubers and Albatrosses out of the air; had come down himself a couple of times rather precipitately; and once, commanding a five-plane circus, had brought down a Super-Zeppelin in the Channel after it had dropped its "eggs" in cabbage patches around darkened London.

Since his return to Canada, Buzzard had taken a fling at aerial map-making in British Columbia; had worked a season with the Manitoba Fire Prevention as a "smoke hawk"; had bombed papier-mache French chateaux down amid the flowers and climate of Los Angeles.

Recently, tired of working for other folk, he had raked together some money and brought a machine of his own, which he now was flying.

It was a queer nameless contraption, this monoplane of his—an assemblage of piano wire, canvas, spruce and iron, held together by luck and Buzzard's wizardry at flying. It had originally been a White Speedair with "Jenny" engine, but he had re-doped the fabric and put in a second-hand Whirlwind and equipped it with third-hand under-gear of the float-wheel type, and overhauled it generally till little of the original machine remained. Only his warm friendship with the aviation inspector kept it from being junked. But somehow—and this is the rock-bottom test of any flying machine—it had never yet come down before Buzzard wanted it to. And it did have speed; anything lacking speed would never have satisfied him. Such as it was, it was his very own; and no mother was ever prouder of a cross-eyed, snaggle-toothed child than Buzzard was of his White Speedair.

He was, however, ambitious to get a big new De Havilland, so that he could safely take up a girl down in Kamloops and carry her along with him on his airy path of life. But with no advertising or big company to back him, Buzzard had found this free-lance work to be tough sledding. Had found difficulty keeping up repairs on his old machine, let alone getting a new one. Jobs were sheer accidents. Except for the faint possibility of murdering some more grasshoppers over near High Hat, the work he was finishing this noon was the last thing in sight.

As he heaved overboard the last of the E-Z Kleen Soap and printed matter, and headed back for the landing field, he yawned and swore:

"The devil with this peace-time stuff! Oh Lord, I wish they'd bring on another unpleasantness."

It was in some such frame of mind, as he landed and crawled out of the cockpit, that he saw a tall lanky individual, in lace boots, khaki trousers, jacket and gray hat, get out of a waiting taxi and saunter toward him.

The stranger, as he came up, looked at the machine with that peculiar respectful gaze of a person who has never flown in one.

Buzzard thought, "If that fellow asks me to take him for a joy ride, I'll murder him with a monkey-wrench!" A moment later, as he got a closer look at that hard purposive face, he decided: "No, he's not that kind. Looks like some timber duke. Maybe wants me to fly him out to his limit. Thirty-dollar job—damfwill!" The stranger came on. "Hello."

Buzzard answered tartly, "Hello yourself."

The stranger paid no attention to the brusque reply. Instead he reached out his hand. It was a good-looking hand, big, calloused, fingers like iron bars.

"Name's Baker," he introduced himself. "Alan Baker."

Buzzard partly thawed. This fellow Baker looked to be somebody. His slow smile was mighty fetching; his clear intelligent eyes were kindly, warm, friendly.

"Glad to know you, Baker. Mine's Featherof—James Arbutnot Featherof."

"Good gracious! All that? But what do people call you?" They both grinned. "They call me 'Buzzard.' Wear red helmet; never flop my wings."

Iguassu Falls One of Wonders of the World

The Iguassu falls of Brazil are said to be the most wonderful in the world. In the Wide World Magazine R. Halliburton writes: "Half a mile away a vast mass of water seemed to flow forth from the sky. It was a river, which, after wandering quietly through the forests of Brazil, had come at length to the edge of a great plateau. There it girds itself for a grand climax to its career—a climax so spectacular that no one who sees can ever forget that this river surpasses all others in the sublime beauty of its passing, leaving behind one of the wonders of the world. With one mighty charge along a front 10,000 feet in length it hurls over the brink, in superb 200 foot cataracts of foam. Niagara may have greater volume, Victoria greater height, but for artistry and coloring Iguassu stands alone."

Size of Pythons

Pythons have been known, in several parts of the world where they exist, to reach a length of 30 feet, and a Swedish naturalist found that in Borneo the natives believed they sometimes exceeded this. There is good reason to suppose that occasional pythons may become 35 feet long.

How Old?

He doesn't look a day over fifty. And feels like forty.

That's the happy state of health and pep a man enjoys when he gives his vital organs a little stimulant!

When your system is stagnant and you feel sluggish, headachy, half-alive—don't waste money on "tonics" or "regulators" or similar patent medicines. Stimulate the liver and bowels. Use a famous physician's prescription every drug store keeps. Just ask them for Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin.

This appetizing syrup is made from fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and pure pepsin. One dose will clear up almost any case of headache, biliousness, constipation. But if you want to keep in fine shape, feel fit the year 'round, take a spoonful of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin every few days. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better in every way. You will never need to take another laxative.

Give the children a little of this delicious syrup two or three times a week. A gentle, natural stimulant that makes them eat and keeps the bowels from clogging. And saves them from so many sick spells and colds.

Have a sound stomach, active liver and strong bowel muscles that expel every bit of waste and poison every day! Just keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin on hand; take a stimulating spoonful every now and then. See if you don't feel new vigor in every way. Syrup pepsin isn't expensive.

Familiar With Economy of Every Other Kind

An irate citizen stormed the citadel of the Los Angeles board of supervisors the other day. He was all burnt up because some project or other that he had in mind had not to ordinance, and Supervisor Shaw had immediately adopted as a counsellor to be the victim of his plaint.

Mr. Shaw took the trouble to point out some of the weaknesses in the visitor's scheme, cited a number of points which made it utterly impracticable and finally remarked:

"Of course, we always appreciate public interest such as you have displayed, but I believe you will be a greater help to us if you would study a little political economy."

"Well," sighed the visitor, "I suppose I might as well; I've studied every other kind."

Tests of the ship made entirely of scrap iron and other waste material have proved that the vessel floats and may take its builders, two unemployed Austrians, from Vienna to Abyssinia as originally planned. Soil Not Needed

as Bed for Crops

The plant physiology department of the University of California has found it possible to discard soil as a bed for raising crops. Water may be used instead and the results are far more uniform and reliable, with bumper crops the rule.

The necessary elements of plant food are dissolved in shallow tanks of water wherein the plants are suspended. Drought then becomes a matter of no moment, as a small well will supply water for ten acres of cheap concrete tanks.

The plants, with roots in the water, secure food in abundance without interference from weeds or weather, and they produce enormously. Cotton, rice, and wheat yield 25 per cent to 50 per cent increase over the normal for earth-grown, unfed plants. Tomatoes yield 40 per cent more than usual. Beets and carrots are ready for harvest 20 to 30 days sooner than is ordinary.

The whole process tends to increase production, shorten the time of harvest and turn out a superior quality of produce.—Ralph Aiken in the North American Review.

It's common sense

WHEN doctors all agree that your body needs Vitamins, it's common sense to see that you get them. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil contains both Vitamins A and D in guaranteed potency. Vitamin A builds resistance to winter colds. Vitamin D aids growing children in the development of bones and teeth. This emulsion has no fishy flavor. Men and women find it a pleasing, palatable way of taking cod liver oil. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. Sales Representative, Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York.

Mineral Conference

To Be Held At La

Salle on Feb. 5th

Pointing out that an industry with products and derivatives amounting to approximately $240,000,000 annually is well worthy of attention and support of Illinois business men the Illinois Chamber of Commerce today urged attendance at an important mineral industries conference to be held at La Salle on February 5. The meeting will have the three-fold purpose of urging a complete investigation into the composition and potential economic possibilities of all mineral and rock substances occurring in Illinois; of providing for the study of production and movements of mineral materials both into and out of the State and of all possible marketing opportunities.

Four speakers well known in the mineral industries field will discuss the present relative position of Illinois mineral industries. They are C. C. Whittier, consulting engineer of the Robert W. Hunt Company; M. M. Leighton, Chief of the State Geological Survey; H. S. Ray of the Rock Island lines and W. Y. Wildman of the Illinois Coal Traffic Bureau. These men will discuss changes taking place in the construction industry due to research, the new development program of the state geological survey, the rock products industry and the state coal industry.

A special exhibit of Illinois minerals will be on display at the Hotel Kaskaskia and invitations have been extended to school children in the vicinity of La Salle to visit the exhibit and study the minerals on display and to acquaint themselves with the vast possibilities of these same industries.

Direst Need

Demands Speedy

Legislative Action

On the verge of the emergency re-assembly of the state legislature to consider bills to provide $20,000,000 for the relief of the destitute and unemployed of Illinois, the officials of the Joint Emergency Relief Fund of Chicago and Cook County a volunteer body constituted to provide the means and direct the work of caring for the needy during the present unparalleled depression, wish to call the attention of the citizens of the state to the situation, in the belief that they will back up the hoped-for action of their senators and representatives in supporting the needed legislation.

In normal times the established charities of Chicago and the Cook County Board care for approximately 20,000 families, most of them the victims of sickness, disaster, desertion or death or imprisonment of the wage earner. They are able to meet the costs of this care through contributions. Cook County usually carries about 70 per cent of the load, appropriations being made regularly out of county funds for that purpose by the County Board.

With increasing unemployment appearing two years ago in Chicago and Cook County, as well as the rest of the state, after the financial collapse, extraordinary efforts were made to finance the private charitable organizations to meet the need.

A year ago last fall a campaign for $5,000,000 was launched and successfully carried out, which met the most urgent needs of last winter and spring. Then it was thought that the peak of joblessness had been reached and that returning prosperity would automatically wipe out the demand for more assistance.

No one could foresee the extent to which the present crisis would bring us. It was known that it would be severe, so as early as last spring work to set up an adequate relief organization for this winter was started.

Before the national relief body to consider a program of aid on a scale involving the entire country was assembled, the Chicago and Cook County program was agreed upon. A financial drive for $8,800,000 was launched, but before it was completed it was seen that it would not be enough. The goal was advanced to $10,000,000, but giving was so extensive and so generous that $10,500,000 was pledged. This represents a real sacrifice on the part of the citizens of Chicago, many of whom have heavy burdens in caring for relatives who otherwise would be in the army of needy calling for public assistance.

Whereas the county usually bears about 70 per cent of the charity load and the private agencies 30 per cent that has now been reversed in this emergency and the agencies have so far borne two-thirds of the expense. Their resources are now exhausted. If it were possible to stage another campaign for popular subscriptions to care for the 500,000 people now penniless and facing starvation here unless the legislature comes to the aid with the requested emergency appropriation, it would be done. But Chicago has given to the limit. No one knows how many millions are being poured out in the care of the unemployed by their immediate relatives, information concerning whom never reaches the public, and who thereby are not public charges.

No city or county in America has a finer record in the raising and dispersing of relief funds than Chicago and Cook County in this emergency. Not one cent from the $10,500,000 has been deducted for overhead in campaigning or administrative costs. Every dollar has gone to the agencies for relief work as soon as paid in, and it has been necessary to meet the demands for help by borrowing in advance of collections of installment payments.

The situation is worse than a disaster, no matter how extensive. It is having the effect of a military occupation or blockade, where slow starvation wears down the resistance of a besieged population and does injury to health and morale for years to come.

Health impairment and malnutrition are now being endured by hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans, especially little children, which will be a blight to them all through their lives. Lack of food and proper medical care, improper housing and overcrowding are destroying the labors of years. Public hospitals never have had such crowds of applicants. Most of those seeking help do not come until they have exhausted every resource, and have cut down their living rations until hunger drives them to the charity offices.

Even in this situation, it is possible to allow only sufficient to maintain life. Nearly all case-work standards have been abandoned for the time by the relief agencies and now it is a matter of providing enough food to keep people from starving and enough coal to keep them from freezing. Not even rent is being paid. With 125,000 families in Chicago to care for, and hundreds more needing help every day, donations to families averaging four or five persons each, with two or three children involved in nearly every case, have been cut to $20 or less a month. It is apparent that all they can do on that is to keep barely away from the hunger line.

Yet this small ration, which is now costing about $3,000,000 a month to provide, will have to be cut off, as rent allowances already have been, unless the legislature grants this emergency appeal. The Chicago and Cook County allotment of the $20,000,000 will not more than carry the needy on a bare subsistence thru the winter and summer, even if business improves and employment starts. It will take weeks for many of the half starved unemployed to get into shape to do a hard day's work even when the opportunity comes.

Citizens of Illinois, it is more than an emergency. It is a condition unparalleled, appalling, desperate. If it were not, no such appeal for public aid as this would be made. But when absolute starvation for hundreds of thousands looms, it is like war, requiring heroic measures and warranting them.

Because Chicago and Cook County have put forth every energy, every resource to meet the need, which now has swept beyond the power of local agencies, public and private, to meet, there is every justification for this request. It is made in the name of humanity and for the sake of men, women and children who will otherwise starve.

Help must come, and come quickly. The only remedy is the proposed action by the legislature. If bread isn't provided, no one can predict the dreadful consequences. It is up to the legislature. The legislature will gladly and quickly act if its members feel they represent the will of the citizens of the state.

This statement is made that the information may be broadcast among the people of Illinois. We are confident in the knowledge that if they knew, they will heartily approve senators and representatives in their action in granting necessary funds for relief at once to the needy multitudes of not only Chicago and Cook County, but of the entire state.

Musical 7:00 p. m.

The pageant and Quarterly Conference will long be remembered.

Dr. Hammett presented some wonderful thoughts on the value of having confidence in something. We thank him for the thoughts and also the conference for a mighty fine "D. S."

This Sunday evening there will be an hour of music for all those who can come. It will be varied and we hope that it will be of pleasant value. Come for a restful hour.

People of the World

The present population of the world is approximately 1,900,000,000. Estimates of world population before 1880 are not very trustworthy. Sir George Knibbs, however, considers that Michelot's estimate of 1,000,000,000 for 1845 is as well founded a guess as can be made. Accepting this estimate, it can be calculated that between 1845 and 1914 the average annual increase of the world population was .7 per cent. It was, in other words, increasing at a rate which would double the population in less than 100 years.

New National Park

Establishment of another national park is seen in the withdrawal by the federal government of 5,000 acres adjacent to the Dinosaur national monument, near Jensen, Utah. The area contains some of the finest dinosaur remains in the world. Construction of a large museum at the monument is among the development projects considered.

Benny Gilton, eleven, ran from the home of his grandparents in Nordmont, Pa., to pet a "nice shepherd dog" that he noticed near the house. The "dog" growled and Benny retreated at full speed with a large bear in pursuit. A dog on the farm intercepted the bear and chased it into the woods.

Old Water Main

Laborers unearthed part of a wooden water main, at least a century old, in Springfield, Mass. The conduit was fashioned from hollowed pine logs, about ten inches in diameter. The inside of the logs were charred, apparently to keep the taste of pine sap from the water.

La Salle, Magnificent Adventurer

La Salle

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE time is February in the year 1682; the place is the Illinois river in what is now the state of that name; the actors in the epic drama which is now about to begin are some 18 Indians and 23 French soldiers and voyageurs. Not a very impressive company, it is true, but the leader of it is what makes it great. For this leader is Rene-Robert Cavelier, Sieur de La Salle, "magnificent adventurer" and one of the world's greatest explorers.

"La Salle . . . announced that they would take to their canoes. They lifted the light white birch-barks from the sledges, and slipped them into the icy water. The baggage and rifles went aboard, piece by piece, then man after man, soldier, and voyageur, and red hunter stepped gingerly to his place, sank to a kneeling position, and took up his long-handled paddle. First one light canoe, then another, pushed off from shore and the black current bore them away.

"To right and left they saw drab banks frost-flecked and hard that rang under a blow, and leafless forests iron in their rigid desolation that rose despairingly toward an opaque gray sky. On the sixth of February, they emerged from the Illinois, and their fleet slipped out upon the swelling current of the Mississippi. La Salle's dreams came nearer. The mirage at last promised realization."

Thus began the historic voyage down the length of the "Father of Waters" which was to give to France control of the interior of North America, which was to open up the vista of the richness of a new empire before the greedy eyes of the white race, which was to enbroil England and France in an almost unending war for the next three-quarters of a century and which was to result finally in the founding of a new nation greater than either. It is this voyage which has been characterized as "one of the greatest epics of all history."

To most Americans the name of La Salle is just another in a dimly-remembered list from their school-book histories. But now, 250 years after the beginning and the end of his great achievement, his name is brought to their attention again through the publication of two biographies of him. One of them is "La Salle," written by L. V. Jacks and published by Charles Scribner's Sons (from which the foregoing quotation is taken) and the other is "The French Adventurer—The Life and Exploits of La Salle," written by M. Maurice Constantin-Weyer and published by the Macaulay company. Mr. Jacks is an American and M. Constantin-Weyer is a Frenchman. So it is interesting to read their two books together and get the two points of view on this great Frenchman whose name is written high in the annals of America.

Of the voyage down the river, Mr. Constantin-Weyer writes a vivid account—how "spring was breaking on every side. A sky of clouds rent by the wind was reflected in blue and white. The forest was powdered with tender green. Flowers were unfolding timid petals. The cries of migratory birds filled the immense valley. Mosquitoes swarmed. At night coyotes barked on the hillsides. In the mornings bison descended in friendly pairs to the giant drinking trough."

They passed the mouths of great rivers—the muddy Missouri, the quiet Ohio, ("La Belle Riviere") and the Arkansas. There were adventures with Indians, both pleasant and grim, for they met both friendly and hostile red men. There were innumerable new wonders of scenery which unfolded before their eyes and a variety of experiences such as few explorers had ever had. Just two months from the time they had floated out upon the broad bosom of the Mississippi, "all at once spray struck their faces. Tasting the water they found it already brackish. A great joy painfully welled up in their breasts; a thrill ran down their spines. And suddenly, sonorous under the shock of a thousand waves, immense and without a sail, there was the sea! April the seventh, 1682!"

Thus M. Constantin-Weyer. And now to turn to Mr. Jacks for the next scene: "The Frenchmen must have been glad to see the Gulf as Xenophon's hardy soldiers once were glad to see the blue of the Euxine. When at last, red as a great fire-tinged ruby, the sun had dropped to rest in the melancholy marshes and savannas to westward, and the night wind brought over the glitter of the phosphorescent sea the faint hushed voices of breathing waters, the voyagers lay down beside their canoes, aware that they had seen, in all probability, the greatest day of their tumultuous lives. It had been a long trail which he had followed since that far-off day when as a school-boy in Rouen, France, he had read of other explorers and adventurers and had thrilled to the tales of their exploits in the places which had previously been marked on the rude maps of the time "terra incognita." In those 39 years his life had been one of many hardships, of many high hopes, of many disappointments. But in his make-up was the tough fiber of soul which had carried him through all of this, the fiber that justified the title given him by an early American biographer—"The Undespairing Norman."

Educated for priesthood in the Jesuit order, La Salle soon found that the restlessness in his blood would never allow him to be happy in that role. The result was a journey in his early twenties to Canada where his brother was a priest in the Seminary of St. Sulpice. Through the influence of this brother, he received a grant of land near Montreal, a seigniorie which he named La Chine. The name was significant—already he was dreaming of finding the undiscovered northwest passage to China, the goal of many an explorer before him.

So when the Indians told him of a great southwestern river which flowed into the "Vermillion sea" his quick mind grasped this as the route of the long-sought passage to the Orient, and he determined to follow the river. So he sold his seigniorie to obtain funds for an expedition and in July, 1669, the first of his long wanderings through the interior of the North American continent began. That trip carried him up the St. Lawrence, along the south shore of Lake Ontario, among the villages of the Iroquois, on to Niagara, along the south shore of Lake Erie and then south through what is now the state of Ohio until he, in all probability, reached the Ohio river. But deserts among his followers forced La Salle to go back to Canada so his first expedition was something of a failure.

His resources were now exhausted but he found an unexpected friend in Count Frontenac, "the Iron Governor" of Canada, who gave him the exclusive trading privileges at Fort Frontenac (the modern Kingston) on the condition that he would rebuild the defenses and garrison the post. In the meantime Father Marquette and Louis Joliet had reached the Mississippi, "the Great Southwest river" and gone down it for a considerable distance, although they did not follow it to its mouth. So that honor still awaited La Salle.

However, he needed more capital, so in 1677 he made a trip to France with letters from

Building of the Griffin

Map of La Salle's Explorations

Frontenac to the king and his ministers. In Paris La Salle found attentive listeners to his plans and when he returned to Canada in 1678 he brought with him a royal decree authorizing him to make discoveries and build forts in the interior of North America. He also brought back with him the man who was destined to be his chief lieutenant and greatest friend—Henri de Tonti, an Italian, "the Man with the Iron Hand."

That winter La Salle and Tonti were busy completing a fort at Niagara and building a ship. Before spring had come a vessel of about 45 tons, the largest yet built for service on the Great Lakes, was completed. On its prow was a carved griffin from the armorial bearings of La Salle's patron, Count Frontenac, and this ship won enduring fame under the name of the Griffin. (Incidentally, it was more "enduring" than La Salle could possibly have realized, for within the last year the timbers from a wrecked ship were found in Lake Huron and there is strong evidence to support the belief that these timbers were once a part of the Griffin—found after more than 250 years!)

La Salle sailed his vessel to Michilimackinac where he acquired a rich store of furs, then sailed on into Lake Michigan and finally dropped anchor in Green Bay where some more furs were obtained. Sending the Griffin back to Montreal, La Salle started south along the Wisconsin shore and reaching the mouth of the St. Joseph, he built Fort Miami. Then he struck across country to the upper Kankakee. From there he made his way down the Illinois to the present site of Peoria, Ill., where he built Fort Crevecoeur.

Leaving Tonti in charge, La Salle started back to Canada. When he reached Niagara at Easter time in 1680 it was to find news of disaster. The Griffin with all of her rich cargo of furs had been lost. La Salle hurried on to Montreal and once more sought the aid of Frontenac. Again he was provided with the necessary equipment for carrying out his projects and within a few months he was again at Fort Frontenac and ready to join Tonti at Crevecoeur. Just as he was ready to leave, however, there came the news that the garrison at the fort on the Illinois had mutinied and destroyed the post.

La Salle's one hope now was that the faithful Tonti had held on and had saved something from the wreckage of his plans. But when he reached Crevecoeur, he found Tonti gone to Green Bay and the place deserted. Undaunted by this climax to his misfortunes, the "Undespairing Norman" pushed on down the Illinois until he reached the Mississippi. But his party was too small to attempt an expedition down this great river. So La Salle once more retraced his weary steps northward. He spent the winter at Fort Miami, and in the spring he learned that Tonti was at Michilimackinac and there he hastened to hear from his trusted lieutenant the long tale of disaster. Of this interview an eye-witness writes: "Anyone else would have thrown up his hands and abandoned the enterprise; but far from this, with a firmness and constancy that never had its equal, I saw him more resolved than ever to continue his work and push forward his discovery."

La Salle was now determined to continue with his plan for exploring the Mississippi. Returning once more to Fort Frontenac he replenished his supplies and in the autumn of 1681 he set out once more, with Tonti, for the Illinois country. Then followed his journey down the Illinois river to the Mississippi and the beginning of the great journey which took place just 250 years ago.

The Cop and the Anthem—III

Drawn by John Hix

Neatly upon his left ear two waiters had pitched Soapy. He'd eaten a meal and had no money, but Soapy was bound for the city prison for the winter, and he'd hoped the waiter would call a cop. But arrest seemed a rosy dream. The nice, warm cell seemed far away.

Three times Soapy had tried and failed. Now he was desperate. He came upon a policeman in front of a theater. Soapy fell to the sidewalk and yelled drunken gibberish. "One o' them Yale lads," said the cop, and turned his back.

At length Soapy stood in front of an old church. Sweet music drifted out to Soapy's ears. It was an anthem his mother had taught him. Soapy made swift resolve. He would make a man of himself—he would find work!

Soapy felt a hand laid on his shoulder. He turned quickly into the broad face of a policeman. "What are you doing here?" asked the cop. "Nothin'," said Soapy. "Tell it to the judge," said the cop, "he'll send you to the island—to do nothing."

Lühring - ForsytheNuptial

At a nuptial mass Saturday morning,
January 23rd at 8:30 o'clock in
St. Mary's Catholic church in Joliet,
Miss La Vetta A. Lühring, daughter of Mrs. Emma Lühring of Frankfort and David H. Forsythe of Wilmington were united in marriage with the Rev. J. J. Kane officiating.
The attendants were Miss Luella Lühring, sister of the bride and Raymond Forsythe, brother of the groom. The bride wore a powder blue canton crepe dress with matching accessories and carried an arm bouquet of roses. The maid of honor wore peach canton crepe with harmonizing accessories and carried an arm bouquet of Briarcliff roses.
Following the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was served to the bridal party at the Woodruff hotel in Joliet.

Mr. and Mrs. Forsythe left for a motor trip in the south and on their return will reside on the groom's farm in Florence Township.

A Timely Tip

TELL the people about timely merchandise with good printing and watch your sales volume grow. Other merchants have proved this plan by repeated tests. We'll help with your copy.

Now That You're Gone
No moon, no stars; no dawn; Nothing to stand out. I don't think there's any question but that they have succeeded with a bang.

In a song of this sort the matter of tempo is quite important if the one singing or playing it wants to get the most out of it. I find that it must be taken slowly, so that its melody, which keeps climbing up the scale to a climax, will not be fumbled and its rhythm spoiled.

But any way—fast or slow—it's certainly my "Song of the Week."
